One of the youths, aged 11, was carrying the other, aged 8, when the latter almost choked his brother by holding him tightly about the neck.

Whether or not the race was a fair one is a matter of opinion. The barber chair first was tipped over, but it was not until the doctor and the insurance man had slipped and Dr. Simkins had turned him, was unable to get out of the way and he was tumbling over, also.

Both men complained of bruises, but were able to go through their operations at the barber shop.

SENIORS HEAR FINE TALK BY YOUNG PASTOR

"The Highways to Eternity" Discussed by Rev. G. L. Troutman, Sunday

CHURCH IS FILLED

Two Roads Face Graduates, Speaker States

Stressing the fact that now is the time for each high school graduate to determine what his particular mission in life shall be, Rev. George L. Troutman, assistant pastor of Trinity Lutheran church, delivered a splendid baccalaureate address to the 70 graduates of Circleville high school Sunday evening.

His subject was "The Highways to Eternity."

Rev. Troutman congratulated members of the school faculty for guiding the students through their school years and especially lauded parents of the pupils, "For," he said, "it is the duty of the parent to be certain that his child is on the right road."

"The time comes when each child must leave his parents and go through the world on his or her own ability. At this time he is traveling toward a fork on life's highway," Rev. Troutman said. "Which fork shall the child take? His destiny depends upon his choice."

"THERE ARE TWO ROADS"

"One is a straight road and a narrow one. This highway leads through a life of humiliation and sacrifice and finally reaches Heaven. The other is a much broader road leading through life's pleasures and sins and it ends in destruction," the speaker continued.

Rev. Troutman dwelt upon the two subjects of profanity and impurity in which he scored the elder person who uses profanity especially in the presence of younger persons. Impurity in the sense of uttering "dirty" stories was assailed by the youthful pastor who related an act of General U. S. Grant, who, while at a dinner one day heard a speaker say that since there were no ladies present he would tell a "story." Gen. Grant immediately arose to his feet and said, "If the story is not fit for ladies neither is it fit for men and especially for the ever-present One above."

The speaker closed his talk by contrasting one of the highways as leading to righteousness, the other to sin.

HOOVER SILENT

Believe Dry Supporters to Be Forgotten

WASHINGTON, June 6. — The Republican party seemed headed toward adoption of a resubmission plank on prohibition in its 1932 platform, even though it alienates the great dry organizations who helped elect President Hoover in 1928.

This was the word passed about today after the Senate's Republican "elder statesmen" met with the President's advisers at a cabinet conference. The "elder statesmen" apparently agreed to support a resubmission plank, even though dry organizations have served notice they will desert Mr. Hoover next fall if he runs on a wet platform.

MANY AT MEETING

The conference was attended by Postmaster General Brown, representing the President, James H. Garfield, who will write the platform for Mr. Hoover, Senators Watson, Moses, Smoot, Hiram Patterson, Robinson (Ind.), Herbert and Dickinson, who will be temporary chairman of the convention and Reps. Smith and Fish from the House.

After the conference, Senator Moses said:

"There will be a resubmission plank."

From other sources, it was learned that the plank would even propose that Congress resubmit the eighteenth amendment — as to signatures as was done in 1912 — to state conventions, to be elected by

Argentina's Olympic Threat

One of the most serious threats to United States supremacy in the coming Olympics is Juan Carlos Zabala, of Argentina, who is shown here in full stride during a training session at New York, where he is preparing for the international games. Zabala, by his recent performance in breaking Joie Ray's 10,000-meter record, has come to the front as a man to watch at Los Angeles. Inset is a close-up of the track star.

CASEY SHOWS WAY TO STARS

Local Pro, With Partner, Cops
Elmcrest Tournament; To Enter Western Open.

Frank Casey, local golf professional, showed the way to central Ohio golfing stars Sunday evening when he shot 54, two under par on the 18-hole Elmcrest course, south of Columbus. Casey was paired with George Phillips, Dublin Road amateur.

Other starters who finished in the money were George Smith, Elmcrest pro, Herb Vance, P. O. Hart and Melvin Carpenter. All the professionals of Columbus and vicinity took part in the tourney which was witnessed by a large crowd.

The Elmcrest course is a regulation layout although all holes are short. Three is par on each hole. Twenty-six players, 13 teams, took part.

Casey has been going great guns lately, smacking par on the local course several times lately and counting one under par on the difficult Wyandot course in Columbus last week. The ability with which the local pro has been making his shots recently makes him more than a 'dark-horse' in the Western Open tournament which he expects to enter at Cleveland in July.

REPUBLICAN

the people expressly to pass upon the constitutional issue of prohibition. The plank would contain no alternative plan for regulating the liquor question, but merely propose a resubmission of the present system of regulation.

This sort of plank was what the dry organizations announced they would not support. Their spokesman, Senator Borah (R) of Idaho, served notice on the President it was not satisfactory to them. After Borah spoke to the President, the drys predicted the Republican party would not propose a resubmission plank. The "elder statesmen" apparently have changed the program unless Mr. Hoover steps in and over-ruled their recommendation.

NEED APPROVAL

The conferees meanwhile were careful to announce that no final conclusions had been reached. First, they hesitated to assume the position of dictating policies or plans to a convention that doesn't meet until next Tuesday. Likewise, they must get the President's approval.

They were emphatic, however, in their personal recommendation of the resubmission plank. This probably will cause a direct "break" with Borah and other drys who were so useful to Mr. Hoover in 1928. Borah has publicly declared against resubmission. He contents that prohibition being a constitutional issue should not be reduced to a party question. He argued that only Congress may regulate the amendment and that the constitution was to handle prohibition. He also said a wet Congress of resubmission is desired, or the nation will be left with the eighth amendment.

ASHVILLE IN FIRST PLACE

Pinto, Despite Windness, Hurls
Suburbanites Into Undisputed Leadership.

George Stoker's Ashville baseball team went into undisputed possession of first place in the Suburban league Sunday when Lefty Pinto gave New Albany six hits to win his game, 10-4. Ashville collected 11 smacks off the delivery of Felumlee, two of which were doubles and one was a triple.

The big southpaw fanned seventh New Albany swatters but was wiser than he has been at any time this year walking six men. Three runs were scored off his delivery in the first frame and one in the third; thereafter he was too tough.

Ashville hopped on Felumlee for four markers in the opening session and added one in the fourth, three in the fifth and two in the ninth frames.

Pinto's support was excellent at times but not so hot at other times, four errors being chalked up.

Whacker Davis with a triple and two singles and Hosier with the same allotment led the Ashville clubbers while Althausen was the only New Albany man to hit safely more than once. He scored two singles.

Dublin beat Hilliards in a slugfest 12-11 and Westwood turned back Surrency 10-4 in the other league tilts.

MILLIONAIRE SHOW PLACES GOING OUT

Trend Toward the "Model Village" Is Gaining.

New York.—"Millionaire palaces," those resplendent show places which used to dot the suburban countryside in such profusion back in the old days of pre-depression prosperity, are going out of style, according to a survey report just put out by the American Institute of Architects.

Experts who participated in the survey envision the time when such symbols of wealth and social standing will ornament the American landscape no more. Indeed the report suggests the possibility of the passing of the personal suburban dwelling of whatever size and cost in favor of the "model village" or standardized house.

The report, prepared by Dr. Leicester B. Holland, chief of the division of fine arts of the Library of Congress and chairman of the committee on preservation of historic buildings, of the American Institute of Architects, is described as an analysis of the role of architecture in the present art consciousness of the social body.

Wanting Interest Noted.

The wanting interest of the wealthy in large private houses is explained by Doctor Holland as "largely due to an increase in mobility" and further to the fact that the wealthy, instead of concentrating on a single establishment, are now in the habit of maintaining two or more residences in different parts of the country or even abroad.

"It is to be expected that the effect of mobility will extend constantly down the scale of wealth," says the report, "with a consequent tendency to lessened interest in the personal suburban dwelling. The model village or the standardized house may in time replace it. There will probably result an increase in economy, possibly an increase in beauty, but also a decrease in esthetic responsiveness. For it is only the selective interest of the individual that makes for critical appreciation."

"The city apartment building illustrates this reaction. Modern apartments are architecturally far more interesting than the uniform rows of city houses they replace. But they have very little effect on the architectural consciousness of the community."

Matter of Pride.

"On the other hand, business buildings, such as stores, offices and theaters, which a century ago were of almost no architectural consequence, today have assumed prime importance. This change is due chiefly to the modern devotion to advertising in all commercial undertakings, though with this there enters an element of personal pride on the part of the merchant owners."

"An early expression of just this combination of motives was P. T. Barnum's residence in Manhattan, at Bridgeport, Conn., designed by a London architect in fantastic Moorish style and built regardless of expense within undisturbed view of the main railroad line."

The report shows that business buildings have assumed first importance in American architecture. Government architecture is "esthetically unimportant." College architecture tends toward "archaic theatricality," while churches, libraries and other cultural foundations will rank at the end of another century as "the outstanding architectural examples of the day," according to the report.

Higher Education Now Big Business in East

Washington.—Higher education entered the big business field last year in New England, according to information by the bureau of business research of the Boston university.

During the last year 28,813 students came to New England colleges, universities and preparatory schools from other parts of the country and abroad. These students spent a total of $27,730,756, according to the survey. Visiting relatives and returning alumni spent another two or three million dollars to swell the grand total to more than $30,000,000.

The Boston university survey shows that the annual expenditure of students enrolled in New England institutions is $1,123, and $1,025 outside of New England.

Seminole Indians Cling to Ancient Folk Songs

Washington.—A new kind of folk song has been recorded for posterity by Miss Frances Densmore, Smithsonian Institution ethnologist, who recently returned to Washington with more than a 200 phonograph records of songs of the Seminole Indians of the Florida Everglades.

Miss Densmore was told by the present Indian peoples that the Seminoles had no songs. After a four-month stay among them, however, she discovered and recorded much of an unique native music.

The Seminoles songs, she found, are used only at two big annual feasts—the corn dance in the summer and the ceremony preceding the hunting season in the fall. Music also is used in treatment of the sick.

ADVISABILITY OF MATERNITY HOME IS NOW STRESSED

Advisability of establishing a maternity home in connection with the girls' industrial school at Delaware was discussed at the meeting of Group 11 of the Ohio Probation League at the boys' industrial school at Lancaster last week.

Probation Officer L. M. Brown and T. A. Boyle, members of the county board of visitors, of this city attended the meeting.

Mrs. Rose C. Beatty, chief matron of the girls' school favors establishment of a maternity home as the human thing to do, but there was some opposition to the idea on the ground that it would promote delinquency, since the girls would be assured of the proper care and attention.

Mr. Beatty said that there are 480 inmates in the girls' school at the present time.

Supt. A. E. Harsh of the Lancaster boys' school declared that there has been a decrease in the number of inmates and there are now 940 in the institution.

The next meeting of the group will be held late in June in connection with the state meeting at Columbus.

Child Auto Fatalities

THE public will never fail to be shocked by traffic accident statistics until such accidents become as rare as railroad wrecks resulting in loss of life. But this does not make the public incapable of appreciating reports showing a decreasing death toll from the automobile, especially when they relate to children. There was general satisfaction over recent statistics showing that fewer children are being killed under the wheels of motor vehicles.

Analyzed carefully, the steady decrease over the past five years becomes a remarkable achievement in the promotion of safety, because in that time the number of motor cars has increased faster than the increase of population. During the years the hazards have multiplied tremendously, but intelligent direction has safeguarded the lives of children.

Of all the panaceas suggested from time to time to diminish the toll taken by the automobile, intelligent direction of children is the one most likely to work. Drivers must be made to obey certain regulations, of course, and must be taught to drive with regard for the fundamental rules of safety, but in the final analysis it is necessary that the individual learn how to take care of himself in traffic.

Many communities are learning, as the result of safety training in the public schools, that it is possible to diminish the toll taken by the automobile by intelligent direction of children on the streets. Such direction should be assumed by teachers in every schoolhouse in the United States.

Caricaturing Types

THE "comic alien" of the stage is remembered by this generation but is seen no longer. Closed is the day of this form of theatrical caricature. No more is seen the orange-haired Irishman, with a face like an airfield, offering beer to an excessively French, short-skirted, high-heeled soubrette who demands champagne in scornful tones.

Gone from the stage is the haw-haw Englishman with his monocle, mustache and exaggerated manner of speech. Laugh provokers of the modern stage are not German jesters in sky-blue pantaloons, Italian organ-grinders, or Chinese laundrymen, Swiss bell-ringers, Spanish bull-fighters or Scotch highlanders.

Burlesques on native types have supplanted the comic alien on the American stage. The comedians and comedienne of the present-day stage are caricatures of American types. Travelers report that in London, Paris and Berlin an actor, bespectacled, in American attire, chewing gum and taking long strides about the stage, will rock the house from pit to gallery before even one nasal word escapes him.

There is only one explanation for this anomalous situation and that is that the American people discovered the foreign types before the mirth-provoking possibilities of the native types dawned upon them. Just another illustration for the theme of the famous "Acres of Diamonds" address of the late Dr. Russell Conwell.

Gang Wars

THE gang wars that are troubling the larger American cities are only of indirect interest to the nation at large. The public is more concerned with their connection with the crime wave than with the casualties as long as they do not include innocent bystanders. There is no public mourning when gangsters slay each other.

The first reaction to these sordid and sensational crimes is that the crooks are killing each other and when thieves fall out honest men get their dues. There is something comforting in these words, until the realization comes that killings may lead to gang rule rather than government by law.

The manner in which the gangs work is a challenge to the police and to civilization itself. Every body admits that the authorities are handicapped in their efforts to track down the guilty persons. The gangs are better organized than the police, it seems, and the police and chair to hold no horrors for the killers. The courts cannot imprison a man without good evidence of guilt, and in most instances the police have shown an inability to collect any substantial evidence in gang killings.

Should gang warfare become more widespread it will present a national problem. With as many difficult angles as the crime wave and quite as menacing to the public welfare and safety.

Money doesn't talk very much until it grows up.

struction was a poker rather than a bridge.

"THE LOVE TRAP"

by ROBERT TERRY SHANNON

SYNOPSIS

Pretty Mary Kennedy breaks her engagement to the elderly but wealthy sports promoter, Buck Landers when she falls in love with his young ward, Steve Moore. Landers kidnaps Steve and threatens to frame him unless Mary marries Landers. Mary flirts with Landers' henchman, Bat, to gain his confidence. She learns of Steve's whereabouts and goes there alone. In a dingy flat, Mary is confronted by two thugs who deny all knowledge of Steve. They hold her and phone Landers. Landers arrives and orders his men out. When Landers refuses to leave, Mary shoots at him but misses. He flees. Steve confesses to Mary that he is engaged, but he loves her.

CHAPTER XXXII

"BUT that's all over now, Steve?"
"Yes, that's all over now," he echoed. "It's all over so far as I'm concerned. But the hard part of it is that Eileen doesn't know. I haven't had a chance to tell her—and it makes me feel like a dog."
"Will she mind it very much, Steve?"

He passed a bothered hand across his forehead.
"I'm afraid she will. She's a wonderful girl—a lovely girl. Her brother is my best pal, and her mother and father have always been marvelous to me. When I came East to start in with Buck Landers, we all thought that within six months or so Eileen and I would be married here. As a matter of fact, the family was coming East for the Summer anyway—Mr. Calvert has a Summer home up in the Catskills."

Mary's voice was no more than a whisper. "You could write her a letter, Steve."

He compressed his lips and shook his head.

The startled feeling in Mary's heart changed slowly into a dull ache. All at once, she seemed helpless to combat this new menace. But she tried to make her voice sensible.

"But surely Steve she will release you without any trouble once she understands how much we love each other."

"But I couldn't explain it properly in a letter to her—and I can't hurt her, and her whole family, too much," Steve said earnestly. "It will have to be done tactfully and as honestly as a thing of this kind can be done. But they are wonderful people, Mary, and it's up to me to be as fair as possible to them in every way."

She pressed his hand. "I know you'll always be fair to everybody, Steve."

"I know you would understand, darling. Now please try to understand a little more. The whole Calvert family was due to arrive in New York day before yesterday. They were leaving immediately for the Catskills—and we had agreed that I would run up and visit them right away. I think I had better do it, Mary—in fact I'll have to do it, for Eileen's sake. Tell me you understand."

A rich and beautiful girl named Eileen Calvert...

She bit her lower lip and held back the tears. It was going to be bitter to surrender him—to risk him to another girl who loved him.

"I want you to do whatever seems best—and right," she said.

He seemed relieved, his spirits heightened. He pressed both her hands.

"You're not afraid to let me go, are you?"

"No, Steve."

"You darling!" he breathed, and again their lips clung together.

But the peace of her heart had been disturbed. Even as his lips pressed hers, Mary was trying to imagine what Eileen Calvert was like. Was she beautiful? Yes, undoubtedly, for Steve could have cared only for beauty. Rich and beautiful and cultured—with a fine big home in which to entertain him—Eileen Calvert certainly would have a tremendous advantage over Mary with her pitiful little stock of qualifications. It was no good pretending—she knew that Steve would be in danger from the moment he came again under the spell of the California girl. He might visit her from a sense of duty... but a re-awakening love might hold him...

"Did you love Eileen very much?" Mary couldn't help asking.

"I thought I did—till the minute I knew you. I feel like a dog for breaking faith with her—but Eileen will have to have the truth. I'm sorry, but it can't be helped."

During the balance of the ride to Brooklyn they scarcely spoke or stirred, except when the taxicab jounced. Her love for him was increasing, with a deeper, tenderer emotion, that had a mysterious strain of something fiercely maternal in it. His sophistication, even something of his glamour, seemed to face, and he was but a harassed and distressed boy—a bewildered boy who was trying to act like a big man. Ah, but she would help him to develop, with her guidance and wisdom, into the wonderful man he was going to be.

When they were married she would not weigh him down with cares and responsibilities; she would let him be an ordinary, domestic husband, resentful of his lost freedom. She saw herself as his first and his inspiration in the first few hard years she would wait for him, and then they might dwell together as untroubled lovers.

They arrived in Brooklyn and found her sister and children had come out for the afternoon. The housekeeper, who knew Mary well, led them in the small apartment with a gasp.

"What I want mostly right now is a bath and a shave," Steve said. Mary found her brother in a bath, razor for him, and while he shaved in the tub, she fried bacon and eggs, and made coffee and sat in the tiny kitchenette. The quick reparation of youth stimulated them both, and the food brought back their buoyant energy. He helped her wash and wipe dishes, and later sat on a low footstool at her feet, with his head in her lap. She smoothed his thick brown hair with her hands.

"How long before you'll come back, Steve?" she asked dreamily.

"They wanted me to spend a month—but I'll shake loose inside of two weeks, easily."

But if he was to leave her immediately, this was no time for dreaming; she had to be practical. She wrote down her sister's telephone number and address on a piece of paper, which he put in his billfold. In turn, he scribbled the Catskill address of the Calverts. In case of emergency they knew how to reach each other. Mary would either stay with her sister while Steve was gone, or keep in close touch. They would write each other every day. Oh, positively!

"But must you go tonight, Steve darling?" she asked regretfully.

He took her hand and pressed it to his lips. "The quicker I go, the sooner I can come back. Look here, Mary—I can just pop over to the rooming house and get my grips and grab a train for up there tonight. I can phone out to the house from the station, and they'll send a car in for me. You see, darling, I'll be killing two birds with one stone. I'll be squaring things with Eileen, and making plans for our future at the same time. You know, darling, I got to do a lot of planning to make everything clear and straight, and happy for us."

"Steve..." Her voice fluttered a little. "Nothing possible could come up to interfere, could it?"

Tears misted her eyes. He squeezed her hands until they hurt; his face grew suddenly serious and his voice hoarse.

"Listen to me, Mary—as long as I live—as long as I'm on this earth or any other—that long I'll always be in love with you—and only you. You're my sunlight and moonlight—you're the sky and the earth and the ocean to me." The serious look left his face and he grinned. "How's that for poetry?"

"It's adorable!" she cried, and her face was illumined.

"I want to marry you as soon as I can," he went on quickly. "I think Landers is thoroughly licked, and he won't trouble us any more. But let me get myself together first—I want to have a long talk with good old Bill Calvert, Eileen's brother. He's a boy with a level head and I can tell him everything. You see, the Calverts have a lot of connections in New York, and maybe Bill can help me get some kind of a job here. Oh, he'll do it like a shot. Just give me a little time, Mary darling, just a few weeks."

She stooped and kissed his forehead. "I could wait for you forever."

"But I don't want to wait a minute longer than is necessary," he protested. "It's a bit of what I'll do right now—but never fear, we'll reach the top soon."

His brave words echoed in her heart and she smiled. Yet, suddenly, the future seemed as dark as the night—what would Eileen Calvert be like? A tall, graceful girl, with luminous dark eyes—exquisitely beautiful.

One Pound in a Week Is as Fast as You Can Safely Reduce Your Weight

Serious Injury to Health May Result from Reducing Too Rapidly or by Improper Methods, Since Various Cases Need Different Diets or Treatments.

By ROYAL S. COPELAND, M. D.
United States Senator from New York.
Former Commissioner of Health, New York City.

ANY person worrying over increasing weight resorts to patent medicines and quick remedies to check the increase, without taking medical advice. It never enters his mind that he should consult a physician, so he continues habits that increase his weight and takes drugs that may undermine his health.

I do not favor the rigorous dieting which I believe has become too much of a fad in recent years. There is apt to be danger in every fad. Foods that will be useful vary with each individual, hence a diet must be carefully prescribed that is exactly fitted to the given case, and this can be determined only after a thorough physical examination.

Thorough study of the heart and circulation is essential, to discover the conditions of these organs and thus determine whether exercise can be prescribed, and how much can be taken without injury. High blood pressure calls for special attention, and if the blood pressure is abnormally low, rigid dieting may be dangerous.

The urine should be analyzed, and tested particularly for albumin, sugar and acid. Let me impress upon my readers that diabetes is more frequently found in a person who is overweight than in a thin individual. In many cases blood analysis for sugar and protein waste products is important, because the urine may show no sugar, although there is actually an excessive amount in the blood.

Overweight may be due to a glandular disturbance, and more than one gland may be involved.

A superabundance of flesh may be a sign of what the doctors call a metabolic disease, and if it is due to a disturbance in metabolism, it is advisable that a basal metabolic test be performed by the attending physician. This is a simple procedure, giving definite and useful information, and I will explain it in a later article.

After this test, the condition may be properly treated by the use of certain medicines. In such a case thyroid substance may be given, but only under the supervision of a physician, for thyroid extracts are dangerous when used by inexperienced persons.

As a rule obesity is caused by excessive eating and reducing weight by controlling the appetite is the only safe procedure. Its only drawback is that it requires time and patience. Remember that reducing several pounds in a week is a dangerous folly and that many serious complications result from this practice. A loss of one pound a week is sufficient and more should not be attempted.

If every person desirous of losing weight will consult a physician before starting to reduce, his health will not be injured, and he will see that his goal will be attained.

The Daily Horoscope

Monday, June 6, 1933

A marked conservative tendency shows up today and it would be well to act accordingly. Benefits arise at this time when people pay more attention to matters that are well established. Home life and family affairs are likely to attract more attention under today's indications.

The morning hours are apt to be unfavorable for those who respond to irritation quickly. There are signs of friction and contention which may produce much discord in social relations. Those who are of an independent turn of mind may be very expressive, but should avoid any form of irritation.

People born during the last week of February, June or October, should find this a beneficial day. They should attempt to push their affairs as much as possible. Financial matters should prove very favorable for them.

Diseases which attack the digestive organs are apt to be more easily felt today. Care in diet is suggested at this time, particularly to avoid the excessive consumption of liquids.

The attention of lovers of matters connected with art and literature should be directed at this time toward the purchase of a new book. A time to buy new books and other things is indicated. Artists may need more material for their work and may now seek to sell their wares.

Children who have their birthdays at this date are fortunate in a wish, being very sympathetic and highly idealistic in their aims, which they have without loss of energy or effort.

His brave words echoed in her heart and she smiled. Yet, suddenly, the future seemed as dark as the night—what would Eileen Calvert be like? A tall, graceful girl, with luminous dark eyes—exquisitely beautiful.

Among the famous persons born on this date are: Pierre Corneille, French dramatist and poet, 1606; Nathan Hale, American patriot, 1755; Sir John Stainer, English organist and composer, 1840; Antoine Nicolas Bailly, French astronomer, 1810; Bernardino Baldi, Italian scholar, 1553.

At The Grand

"X Marks The Spot," which is the attraction at the Grand Theatre, is not, as the title might indicate, a gangster story.

The picture is a drama of high-pressure metropolitan newspapers, with the hero of the yarn a reporter and columnist who gets mixed up in a murder mystery. He solves the mystery for his paper. Finds himself unable to disclose his discoveries because of a debt of gratitude he owes the sheriff.

Wallace Ford will be seen as the reporter, with Lew Cody, in the featured role, as his hard-boiled managing editor. Others in the cast are Sally Blane, Mary Nolan and Fred Kohler.

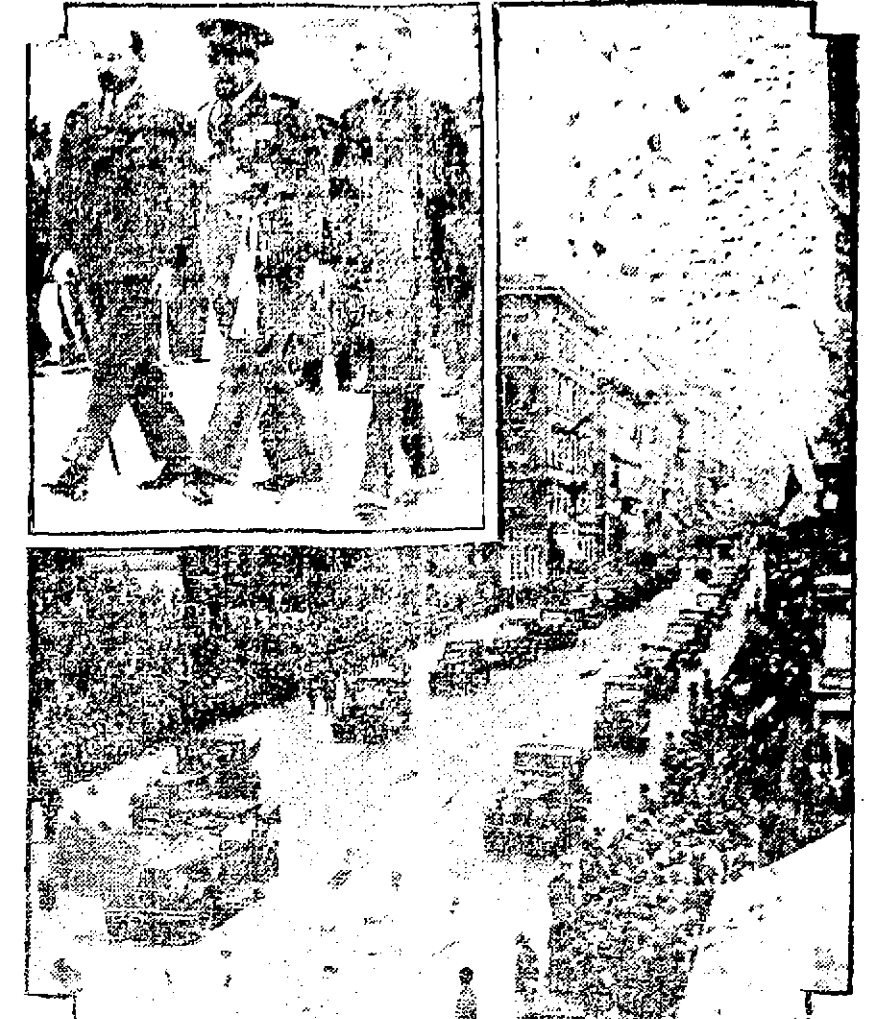

The performance of the Page RKO-Grand, well received at the theatre, shows at the Grand yesterday, being given an even greater audience by the audience yesterday evening.

The film, of which there are six, ranging in age from five to 14 years, are truly remarkable. They are given without any dubbing whatsoever and are considered as such a smooth, unadorned, professional manner, and without the least bit of stagey, artificiality on the part of the actors, that the heart of the audience is immediately won.

The ensemble, direct and self-motivated, on various musical numbers, the children, in themselves, masters of technique and of an ability that many adult musicians could be proud of.

We wish we could grant the request of a federal reserve system governor that we stick to the money we now have.

Rome's "Viva" to Famous Fliers

Reminiscent of a Broadway welcome to returning heroes was this greeting which Rome tendered to aviators from all over the world who gathered at the Italian capital for the recent Congress of Fliers. Having no ticker tape in Italy, sheets of paper were pressed into service for confetti. Inset shows Captain Sir Hubert Wilkins (left) famous explorer; General Italo Balbo, head of the Italian Air Forces, and Sir Arthur Wilkins-Brown, who, with Sir John Alcock, was first man to fly the Atlantic. They left the tomb of Italy's Unknown Soldier after placing a wreath.

WOULD INCREASE HOME EFFICIENCY

Greater leisure in the home and more for recreation, reading, and visiting may be obtained by planning household tasks according to a schedule, says Mrs. Blanche E. Bowers, extension specialist for the department of home economics at the Ohio State University.

In drawing up a schedule of work, Mrs. Bowers suggests that a family council be called and that each member be consulted on which jobs they are to be responsible for and which they will do together. A list of all tasks is outlined and steps taken to increase the efficiency with which they are performed.

The family is essentially a cooperative venture, she feels, and may be made to function in bringing its members a richer, fuller life if children as well as grown-ups are assigned certain duties and made to be responsible for them.

Allowing anyone, however, young or old, to feel they have a responsibility is one way of achieving satisfaction for them and helps them to feel that it is their family and home.

Titled Designer of Fashions Owe Career to Depression

Countess de Regoli Started to Create Clothes When Trade Slump Swallowed Fortune. Scored Success in Paris and New York.

The ill wind of the depression that blew many a notable into oblivion blew Countess de Regoli, whose trade name is Vera Borea, to the top of the sartorial Olympus and into a position where she is a serious threat to the hitherto supreme Paul Poiret. Mme. Borea, when the trade slump had melted her fortune, left her home in Italy and made her debut as a fashion designer in Paris where she firmly planted her feet on the trail to success. She is now in America advancing still higher in her chosen career. One of her pet theories is that a woman needs but two types of clothes—sports outfits and evening gowns. She acts as her own mannequin and tries out every suit she designs before offering it to the public. Above Mme. Borea shows two of her favorite models, which achieved tremendous success at recent exhibit in New York. At left is an ensemble for rainy weather, which is decorative as well as extremely practical. It consists of a rain coat and hat of rubberized silk with a crepe surface. At right Mme. Borea shows an evening gown, with which she wears a charming coat of butterfly silhouette. The coat is of dark brown faulle silk and has an appealing air that is strongly reminiscent of the almost forgotten grandeur of the mauve decade.

Communistic Colony on Crusoe's Island

Valparaiso, Chile.—Two Germans, who were in the crew of the German cruiser Dresden, sunk off Juan Fernandez Islands early in the World war by an English squadron, plan to establish a communistic sort of colony with recruits from all over the world.

This has been revealed by a former governess who was here en route to the former abode of Robinson Crusoe, where the modern Crusoes expect to live in quiet, peace and happiness far from the hurry and worry of life elsewhere.

Arm Chair Shoppers are skilful shoppers

Almost every purchase you make represents a choice. And usually a wide choice, between three or four or forty good possibilities.

But no good housekeeper today spends all her spare time on the go — comparing qualities, estimating values, trying to get the most for the money spent.

She does much of her shopping at home, with her daily paper. She finds in the advertising columns the latest fashion news from the Rue de La Paix, the newest discoveries in dietetics, marvels of mechanical invention — a thousand romances translated into real things to eat and wear and use and own. She makes up her mind before she goes out to buy.

Read the advertisements in this paper carefully. They bring you valuable information about new and better things. They show you how to have what you want and how to save money in buying.
